Changes to Minimum Qualifications for Certain Civil Service Titles

The Department of Civil Service has announced upcoming changes to the minimum qualifications of certain civil service titles that will allow relevant experience to substitute educational requirements. Approximately 800 civil service titles will be affected by this change.

Titles that did not previously require a degree will remain unchanged. Existing degree requirements have also been maintained for several hundred titles, including those with certification or licensure requirements. PEF was not asked for input prior to this change despite representing the majority of affected titles. When asked what criteria were used to identify titles for which degree requirements would be waived, the Department of Civil Service informed PEF that degree requirements were to be maintained for specialized positions, positions for which “it would be difficult to obtain experience without the relevant educational background”, and positions for which credentialing or licensure contingent upon degree completion are required. No additional information on how titles were selected has been provided.

For many titles that had previously required a degree, this will be substituted with an experience requirement wherein a degree may replace years of qualifying experience. There will be no new experience requirements for candidates who qualify with a degree. However, people with relevant experience who do not have a degree will be newly eligible.

For titles that will allow relevant experience to substitute degree requirements, the way in which minimum qualifications for appointment are described on classification standards, examination announcements, and other relevant materials will change. Instead of requiring a degree, these titles will require a certain amount of experience for which a degree may substitute. An associate’s degree will substitute two years of relevant experience, a bachelor’s degree four, a master’s degree five, and a doctorate six. For example, an entry-level title that previously required a bachelor’s degree will instead require four years of relevant experience. An associate’s degree will substitute two years, requiring a candidate to also have two years of experience. A bachelor’s degree will substitute four years, thereby requiring no additional experience. Therefore, a candidate who has obtained a bachelor’s degree will continue to qualify, and a candidate who has not obtained a degree or who has an associate’s degree may qualify if they have sufficient experience.

Please see the attached spreadsheet to view the titles that will be affected by this change. Questions about this change should be directed to the Department of Civil Service via their public information officer (pio@cs.ny.gov). Specific questions about how this change will affect career mobility options should be directed to the Career Mobility Office (cmo@cs.ny.gov).
